The largest epidemics affecting people in the industrialized world are heart attacks, strokes and cancer, which have cost hundreds of millions of lives. These epidemics are at the core of the largest investment business on earth – the pharmaceutical “business with disease” – whose existence depends upon the continuation and expansion of diseases.

Any approach that leads to the elimination of diseases naturally with non-patentable and, therefore, non-profitable therapies threatens the very basis of this business. This is why the pharmaceutical industry cannot co-exist with natural medicine. In fact, this industry has an innate economic interest in obstructing, suppressing and discrediting any information about the safety and effectiveness of natural therapies. Toward this end, the pharmaceutical industry has subjugated all major branches of our society, including medicine, the media and politics, in order to protect and expand its business on a global scale.

As a result of this, more people have died from preventable diseases than from all the wars of mankind combined. Over the past century, the pharma-cartel and its army of lobbyists have built an intricate maze of control, infiltration, economic incentives, bribery, manipulation and deception. Millions of people and patients have been systematically deceived by:

- The manipulation of research so that synthetic drugs rather than natural therapies appear as “medicine.”
- The elimination of education about nutritional medicine in medical schools and the promotion of pharmacology alone. As a result, thousands of doctors leave medical school without comprehensive knowledge about the benefits of natural therapies in many diseases.
- The deception of multimillion-dollar advertising campaigns for pharmaceutical drugs that do not cure and merely cover symptoms.
- The regulations mandated by government agencies under pressure by the pharma-lobby that disallow health claims for vitamins and other natural remedies.

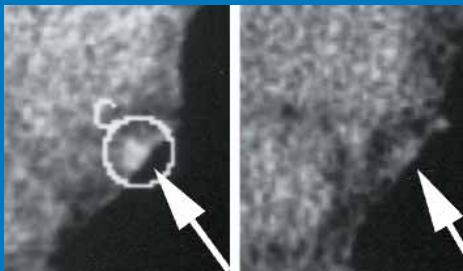

Did you know that prescription drugs properly administered are the fourth leading cause of death (JAMA, 1998)

Health for All by 2020 Is Possible!

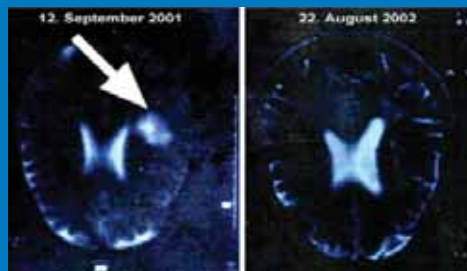

Advances in the fields of natural health and Cellular Medicine have been made in recent years that will reduce the incidence of common diseases in industrialized countries, as well as in the developing world, to a fraction of their current rates. The primary cause of some of the world's most devastating diseases, including heart disease, cancer and immune dysfunction, is a long-term deficiency of vitamins and other micronutrients in the trillions of cells composing the human body. Scientific research has shown that by correcting these nutritional deficiencies, the underlying cause of most diseases can be eliminated. The implementation of these findings is critical for preserving our health and lives; therefore, we call on everyone to join us in protecting the inalienable right to health!

Cardiovascular Disease

These pictures document the natural disappearance of calcified coronary deposits in a patient after taking cellular nutrients for almost a year. The scan is the magnification of the artery using Ultrafast CT. ¹

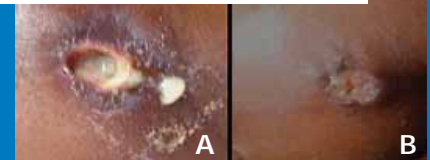

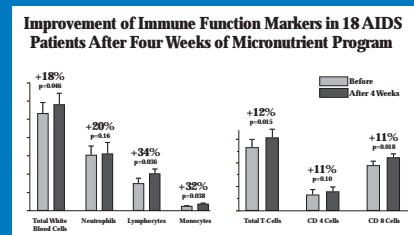

Cancer

HIV/AIDS

The HIV/AIDS patient's deep and infected ulcer is shown above (A), and after only 4 weeks of taking essential micronutrients, her infection disappeared and the ulcer had almost healed (B).

- Health is a basic human right. Every person is entitled to make use of this right without any restriction. The obstruction of this right constitutes a crime against humanity.
- Most efforts to improve health on a global scale have failed thus far. The World Health Organization's effort, "Health for All by the Year 2000," could not reach its goals because it did not distinctly separate itself from the global pharmaceutical "business with disease." This initiative focused on administrative healthcare changes, rather than taking advantage of global advances in medicine.
- Today, health is not available to every human being for good reasons. These include social injustice, military conflicts and others. Another significant reason is the fact that low-cost treatments and the elimination of diseases threaten the multibillion-dollar profits of the pharmaceutical industry.
- The pharmaceutical industry tries to protect its global drug market by imposing bans on natural health. To secure the continued existence of the pharmaceutical industry as the most profitable industry on earth, large corporations have embarked upon a global battle to outlaw certain natural health products. Toward this end, the pharmaceutical industry has successfully lobbied the United Nations' Codex Alimentarius Commission and other national and international bodies.

The goal of "Health for All by the Year 2020" is in sight. What is needed immediately is a worldwide effort to promote the dissemination of information about the benefits of natural health in every country.
